Essentials for College

Be in the Know

Mobility

Are you always on the go? Lighter is better for lugging around campus, but some lighter weight units do not have optical DVD drives. It's a tough trade-off, but one to consider during this process. Remember that you can add a second battery for long trips & lecture halls with no external power outlets or a higher cell battery that will extend your battery life.

Functionality

If you picture your average day on campus creating a Powerpoint presentation, researching on the web, keeping up with your friends on Facebook and listening to music all at once, you can't risk processing delays. You need a PC that's functional but not too big to move around campus.

Power House

Whether you are an entertainment enthusiast by hobby or need PC power for your degree, make sure your PC is ready for you. Having a dedicated graphics card, upgraded memory and enough hard drive space to meet the demand's of today's programs will ensure you are controlling your PC and your PC isn't slowing you down.

Protection

Have peace of mind by backing up your homework, term papers, photos and music to an external drive to protect your work. You can include an Accidental Protection Plan or take it a step further by purchasing LoJack® to recover your PC from a theft. Lastly, keep your PC running healthy with Norton® antivirus software.
